

SEEING THE UNIVERSITY
FROM THE DOME.

tory for those who are preparing to be teachers. In this school, methods of instruction are tested and original investigations are carried on.

Across from the University High School is the Gordon Hotel Building where girls are trained in such subjects as cooking, sewing, hygiene and house sanitation.

For a long while the student on the dome gazes at the classic columns that rise from the campus below him. He well knows how sacred they are to the upperclassmen, for no freshman is allowed to loiter around their bases. These ivy-clad giants are tall and venerable.

A wide path, bordered with trees, leads to one of Columbia's streets on the north. On either side of the path are shady ravines.

Just west of the Commons is the Engineering Building. Here, electrical, chemical and mechanical engineers are turned out. Some of the engineering students are now on the campus where they are taking levels and measuring distances. The engineering students annually celebrate St. Patrick's Day. Each senior in the School of Engineering is dubbed Knight of St. Pat. Like the annual Farmers' Fair, this stunt has attracted the attention of several universities, many of whom now pattern after Missouri in having these events.

Board Can Be Had for $2.50 a Week.

It is near 5 o'clock. Students are now hurrying across the campus on the way to the Commons, the dining place where 1000 students eat. The Commons is maintained by the University and meals are sold at cost. Table board can be had for $2.50 a week, $10 a month. At the cafeteria the cost of a meal is about thirteen cents, although it is possible to eat there for less. Seven hundred students eat at the "cafe."

Just south of the Commons is Parker Memorial Hospital and the Medical Building. The Parker Memorial Hospital is owned and operated by the University primarily for the benefit of University students. Here you may find girls training for nurses. Hospital care is given to all students free of charge.

Just south of the Commons is Benton Hall. This is one of the three halls for men. South of Benton Hall is the Elementary School. This is another project of the School of Education. Teachers come here to visit classes and learn the scientific way of teaching youngsters.

The report of a cannon rang out. The Mexicans were coming! No, it was only some of the cadets firing the regimental cannon.

"I've cut drill," the freshman half murmured to himself as he grabbed the first rung of the ladder.

Then he remembered it wasn't a regular "war" night.

He climbed down the four flights of stairs in Academic Hall and was soon pushing a tray along the counter at the cafeteria. It contained a dish of peas, a plate of potatoes, a dish of beans, a bottle of milk and bread and butter—12 cents.

"Shucks," he said as he stuck his feet under a table. "I've got to get in this English theme on the view from the dome at 8 o'clock in the morning." Then he fell to.

WHY M. U. GIRLS WANT THE BALLOT

Leaders of College Equal Suffrage Associations Give Their Views.

DETERMINED TO VOTE

Claim They Are Competent to Exercise Political Rights and Duties.

Behind all the reasons offered by the University suffragists on the defensive and the offensive, there is the underlying determination to get the vote because they are bent on having it. In the arguments given in response to the query: "Why Should Women Vote?" by several members of the College Equal Suffrage Association this sentiment seems to predominate.

Said Miss Clara Dunn, president of the association: "Women should have the vote because it is nothing more than just that they should have it. Then again, there are problems in politics which women can handle more competently than men. Suffrage has come of itself by evolution and the sooner we have it, the better."

"Men say that the majority of women do not want the vote," said Miss Marguerite McCowan, vice-president.

"It has been proved repeatedly in history that 'majorities' are not very much in favor of progress in general. All men did not insist or even care for manhood suffrage, and yet the far-sighted, aggressive men saw the wisdom in it and worked for the movement heart and soul. Would not men resent it if one were to tell them now that they were incapable of voting?"

"Women should be represented in the government directly," she continued. "The man in the home who represents the woman in politics may be a model in all respects, but his political views may differ from the woman's and I think women are now sufficiently capable of casting an intelligent vote. Besides, there are the tenement house problems and sanitation and child-welfare matters in which women take a more vital interest than men because a woman's thoughts are naturally directed toward the home, and she is more likely to try to remedy these evils."

Says Woman Has Place in Politics.

"I resent being put in the lowest strata of society as not being able to cast an intelligent vote," said Miss Dorothy Jones, secretary-treasurer of the association. "The average woman, I know, has more time to consider political issues than the average man, and I see no social difference in the sexes of sufficient importance to deprive the women of the vote. In the field of politics there is a man's part as well as a woman's and women are just as capable of doing their share as the men."

"Women should vote not so much as a right but as a duty," said Miss Madge Shriver of the executive committee. "A woman who votes will make a more intelligent mother and homemaker. She will come to understand social conditions better and be able to teach her children how to meet them. So many mothers who are forced to send their children to work will see to it that the proper provisions are made for them. And I hope you will understand me when I say that democracy means votes for women," she added.

"I favor equal suffrage," said Miss Clara Waterhouse, "not because I think women will purify politics, for that would mean that our women are better as a whole than our men—a thing which I do not believe, for I have faith in the manhood of our country and think them capable of governing a nation—but because women should be given the vote as her right. A woman owning property helps to support the government and yet is not represented in it. 'Taxation without representation' is a slogan for which the Revolutionary War was fought. Woman has been raised from a mere slave to man's equal and yet she has no voice in politics. Grant her that privilege and slavery for women will have been done away with forever."

Will Benefit Working Women Most.

"If a mere member may venture an opinion," said a co-ed, "I think that the working woman will benefit most by the vote. She is an unwelcome rival in the industrial world and when a workman casts his vote, he does so for the man who will represent his interests and not the woman's. Incidentally, the workingwoman comes across conditions that the sheltered, parasitical woman knows nothing about, and when it comes to a question of bettering certain prevalent evils, the working woman will certainly know where to direct her attention."

The College Equal Suffrage Association has been recently organized by the women in the University for the purpose of interesting women in the civic problems. The association intends to affiliate itself with the national organization and become active in the regular propaganda and general activities concerned with such an organization. M. J. R.
